

10 - A PERSPECTIVE ON THE NATIONAL LIBRARY OF MEDICINE

DoctorInternet

It is impossible to grasp the quantitative immensity and the qualitative importance of the work which is done by the National Library of Medicine. First, in qualitative terms, it is easy to over-look the obvious. Although the library has a vast collection of books, journals, photos, audio-visual materials, etc., if that material were not indexed by highly trained specialists and cataloged by title, author, and subject, it would be a mountain of meaningless material. One would never be able to find anything that was relevant. Thus, the indexing and cataloging functions, as mundane as they may appear, are the master document to the entire library - far more important than the individual documents themselves. Second, in quantitative terms, it is deceptively simple to say that the MEDLINE database contains records of the articles from about 4,800 scientific journals, which constitutes about 30,000 citations per month and which has amounted to some 11 million citations in the data bank since 1966. However impressive these figures may be, they are abstract and difficult to really comprehend. Therefore, before expanding out beyond NLM and the MEDLINE system, it will be fun to give you a better impression of the immense scope of research which you have been doing in the preceding routines. In the following pages, a listing is provided of the titles of the journals through which you zipped at the speed of light when you did a search. This will give a much more graphic idea of the massive amount of work which this agency does for you. The type font has been reduced to the lowest possible size, otherwise, it would take a whole book of about 150 pages. As montage on this wall paper of the titles of the journals which are indexed is a review of some of the history of the library. Because this is a book about the Internet, the images are taken directly therefrom; and we have not used high-grade copies which can be ordered separately. Consequently, the quality is sub-optimal; and some even have copyright lines through them. The primary references for the historical information have been: 1) A History of The National Library of Medicine - The Nation's Treasury of Medical Knowledge" by Wyndham D. Miles, 1982. NIH Pub. # 85-1904, U.S. Dept. of Health and Human Services; 2) Images from the History of Medicine [<http://www.nlm.nih.gov>]; and 3) An Online Art and Architecture Tour of the U.S. National Library of Medicine, which you can take at [<http://www.nlm.nih.gov/exhibition/tour/tour.html>].

Joseph Lovell, M.D. - Surgeon General, U.S. Army from 1818 to 1836. Aristotle pondered on the phenomenon that, from a small acorn, a giant oak tree evolved. He called this “teleology”. The gigantic National Library of Medicine of today grew from a small collection of medical books, mostly from the personal collection of General Lovell. His library comprised a few dozen books, journals, and pamphlets. In 1836 both Lovell and his wife died, leaving orphaned 11 children. His successors maintained and expanded the collection.

Thomas Lawson, M.D. - Surgeon General, U.S. Army from 1836 to 1861. In his notes, he recorded a budget of $150 for “medical books for office”. In 1840, a brief listing of the library’s contents included: 134 titles of which 8 were journals. The entire collection was in 1 four-shelf book case, measuring 6 ft. x 7 ft.

Joseph K. Barnes, M.D. - Surgeon General, U.S. Army (1864-1882). The Surgeon General's collection of books starts to become a true library when Gen. Barnes appoints a young assistant surgeon by the name of John Shaw Billings to organize and catalog the collection. Although Billings is credited with creating the library, it was Barnes who supported the project and sustained the effort.

John Shaw Billings, M.D. - Assistant Surgeon and eventual Director of the library (1864-1895). Billings is the person, who is most credited with establishing The Library. Billings studied medicine at the Medical College of Ohio and in 1861 entered the Army where he spent four years of service as a surgeon, becoming Lieutenant Colonel and Medical Inspector of the Army of the Potomac. In the battles of Chancellorsville and Gettysburg, he performed many operations in the field. After the war, Barnes appointed him to catalog the Surgeon General's Library, launching his thirty years of leadership, during which the collection grew from 602 titles into the largest collection of medical literature in the world. In 1879 he published the first volume of the index to current literature, Index Medicus, the precursor to MEDLINE, and, in 1880, the first volume of the Index-Catalog of the full collection. Among Billings' other accomplishments were the planning of the Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore and the New York Public Library.

Bibliographic indexing in the wild. In the early days of the Library, Billings faced a chronic shortage of qualified personnel to index scientific journals. Undaunted, he used the Surgeon General's medical officers in the field. The following is correspondence from one of those officers, Wm. Steinmetz, M.D., who took with him 13 volumes of a German medical journal to index while he was stationed in Indian Territory and living in a tent similar to the one above. (See the next page for excerpts from his letters.)

On July 5, 1875, Steinmetz writes to Billings: "We are right amongst the Cheyennes & Arapahoes. The first tribe was very troublesome ... this spring, giving our troops a skirmish about a mile from our camp Our command consists of three Cos. of Calvary and two of Infantry; all in tents on the south bank of the north fork of the Canadian river." Completing the indexing, he returns the journals to Billings with the following letter of August 14, 1875: "I return to you today per express the thirteen books, you sent me sometime ago, and hope that the indexing is done to your satisfaction During the last six weeks, our mail ... frequently arrived here in a fearful condition, & thoroughly soaked owing to the high water and heavy rains, and I was under apprehension, that the books might share the same fate. One of the severest thunder showers & storms, I ever witnessed, passed over this section of the country last Monday night The wind was so strong, that within a few minutes, all the hospital tents ... were blown down and torn to pieces During last winter, in order to keep from freezing to death, this Command dug holes in the bank of the river, and ... we will have to do the same thing unless something is done before the cold season sets in."

Robert Fletcher, M.D. - Principal Assistant Librarian (1876-1912). Fletcher assisted Billings in compiling the Library's Index-Catalogue of the whole collection, the first volume of which appeared in 1880. From 1879-1899 he served as co-editor and later (1903-1911) as editor-in-chief of the Index Medicus (the index to current periodicals and the precursor to MEDLINE). He devoted thirty-five years of work to The Library and can rightfully be called one of the founders.

HISTORY OF MEDICINE

BULLETIN OF THE HISTORY OF MEDICINE (BALTIMORE MD)

The Library Moves to Ford's Theatre. After the assassination of President Lincoln at Ford's Theatre, there was such an onus on the building that it became impossible for the owner to use. The federal government bought it for $100,000; and for 20 years (1866 to 1886), it served as the first permanent home of the Army Surgeon General's Library. Concerned about fire hazard and structural integrity, Billings lobbied for appropriations to build a new facility for the rapidly expanded collection. Fortunately, he was successful because several years after that move, the interior of the theatre collapsed, killing 22 persons. Such a catastrophe, during its formative years, might have permanently thwarted the evolution of The Library.

Harold W. Jones, M.D. - Director of the Library (1936-1944). Jones exemplifies the diverse background of the librarians. An Associate Professor of Orthopedic Surgery at St. Louis University Medical School, he became a Colonel in the Army Medical Corps assigned to the Army Medical School which was housed in the Army Medical Library and Museum Building. He also served as ship's surgeon, as commander of one of the largest hospital centers in World War I (the Beau Desert in France), as Secretary-General of the American delegation of an international congress of military medicine, and as chief of the surgical services of several military hospitals. In 1936 he returned to Washington and the Army Medical Library to serve for nine years as its Librarian and Director.

Frank Bradway Rogers, M.D. - Director of the Library (1949 to 1963). Through his leadership, the Library was given statutory authority and transferred to civilian control as the National Library of Medicine (1956). As the volume of information began to over-load the older methods of typography, he converted to a computerized system, which, it was discovered, could also serve as a retrieval system. This led to the Medical Literature Analysis and Retrieval System (MEDLARS), which was the precursor to MEDLINE (MEDlars on-LINE) and the Internet system which you are using herein. In 1962, he moved the library into its current location in Bethesda.

This tree (platanus orientalis) was grown from a cutting from the very tree under which Hippocrates is said to have conducted his classes some 2,500 years ago. It was planted at the library in 1960 and was a gift from the island of Cos, the historic birthplace of Hippocrates. Hippocrates is the father of Western, rational/non-spiritualistic medicine. The teachings of Hippocrates are preserved in the works known as the "Hippocratic Corpus," manuscripts of which are in the library. One of his ancient therapeutic maxim, "above all, cause no harm", is at the crux of intense controversy regarding the appropriateness of many current, conventional therapies.

DNA model. Among the medical art/models of the Library is this DNA sculpture. It is huge and is suspended from the ceiling of the Reading Room, Building 38. It was originally placed in the library as part of an exhibit entitled: "The Genetic Code ... and How It Works," (1969). DNA is the physical "blue-print" of life. It contains information that can be translated into messenger molecule, RNA (ribonucleic acid), which in turn makes the specific amino acid sequence in functional proteins. Decoding the human DNA and manipulating its expression with chemicals such as "transcription factors" will be one of the principle technologies of medicine in the near future. The Human Genome Project is deciphering the sequences of DNA that make humans. The Library maintains the Gene Bank of this information, making the codes available to anyone in the world for research purposes.

Martin M. Cummings, M.D. - Director of the Library (1964 to 1983). Under his twenty years of tenure, the Library's mission was broadened as a health information resource, emerging as a leader in the computer age, becoming a major biomedical communications center, and transforming the Library into the most advanced scientific library in the world. A major achievement was the planning and construction of the Lister Hill Center building which houses the research and development component of the library.

The Visible Human Project is an outgrowth of the NLM's 1986 Long-Range Plan. It is the creation of complete, anatomically detailed, library of three-dimensional representations of the normal male and female human bodies. Acquisition of the images of a representative male and female cadavers was done by advanced computer tomography (CT) and magnetic resonance (MR) technologies. The male was sectioned at one millimeter intervals, the female at one-third of a millimeter intervals. The long-term goal of the Project is "to produce a system of knowledge structures that will transparently link visual knowledge forms to symbolic knowledge formats such as the names of body parts." Below is a section through the Visible Human Male - thorax, including heart (with muscular left ventricle), lungs, spinal column, major vessels, musculature (from Thorax data subset). Download a file of scans from the project at:
